How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

The Anfield Universal Fixed Income Fund ('AFLIX', 'the Fund') generated a total return of 8% for the annual period ended October 31st, which underperformed the Bloomberg US Aggregate (BAGG) by 255 basis points, although past performance does not guarantee future results. The underperformance was caused in part by the Fund's underweight to US Treasuries, which rallied on weakening economic data and the beginning of the Federal Reserve's easing cycle. When compared to the Bloomberg US 1-3 Year Index, however, AFLIX performed very well, exceeding the index returns by 175 basis points. Contributors to overall performance during the period include the overweight to credit (BB HY; BBB IG; CLOs and bank loans) and underweight duration (around 1/3rd of the index). The emphasis on short maturity bonds also benefited the Fund relative to broad corporate bond indices which typically have longer duration exposure.

The portfolio management team continues to like floating rate debt instruments such as bank loans and CLOs. These positions have been performing well since trade implementation, and the portfolio management team expects interest rates to remain high and relatively stable throughout most of 2024 and into 2025, despite the Fed beginning its easing cycle. As a result, the team is maintaining their conservative duration positioning (roughly 1/3 of the US Aggregate Bond Index). We continue to emphasize higher quality, yield-enhancing corporate credit, mortgage-backed, and asset-backed security allocations. Finally, we favor the front-end of the yield curve as we do not believe we are being compensated to extend further out and take on additional risk. The team continues to selectively add to positions they believe will outperform in the current interest rate environment, including shorter duration high yield bonds, bank loans, and select CLO tranches.
